This chapter charts the rise of the Olivet Baptist Church in Chicago, the church that Joseph H. Jackson served as senior pastor starting in 1941 and concluding in 1990.

One year after Jackson's birth, in 1901, Olivet counted 843 persons in its membership. By Jackson's twenty-first birthday, in 1921, Olivet counted 10,012 members. In the first two decades of Jackson's life, Olivet became the largest church in North America. The church had only grown in stature and prominence by his arrival in 1941. The pastor who immediately preceded Jackson, Rev. Dr. L. K. Williams, played a vital role in his ministry. In addition to serving as senior pastor at Olivet, Williams served as president of the National Baptist Convention, USA, Inc., occupying the same office Jackson would hold in the future.
