BMC Health Serv Res. Art and design workshops at a residential care facility – social care professionals' experiences of co-creation and participation in designing the physical environment.

Co-creation and participation among different user groups have been highlighted as pivotal for improving residential care facilities for older persons. However, more knowledge is needed on methods aiming to overcome challenges in constructing inclusive co-creation and participation processes. In particular, there is a need for knowledge concerning how art and design workshops could contribute to co-creation and participation of social care professionals designing the physical environment in residential care facilities. Therefore, this study aimed to examine how art and design workshops can contribute to co-creation and participation in designing the physical environment with residential care facility professionals.

A qualitative method was used to investigate social care professionals' experiences. Data were collected through semi-structured group interviews and analysed with inspiration from Corbin and Strauss's analysis method.

This study concludes that art and design workshops could serve as deliberating and developing practices. First, the art and design workshop as a deliberating practice involves conditions that create a communication arena and space supporting professionals in sharing experiences and voicing different perspectives. Second, the art and design workshop, as a developing practice, supports shared agency through dialogue focusing on designing the physical environment in residential care facilities, using photographs, materials, and fabrics.

This research contributes to the understanding of the relevance of art and design workshops and co-creation between artists and social care professionals in designing the physical environment in residential care facilities. The study can be valuable in identifying important mechanisms that facilitate co-creation and participation among social care professionals, as well as the development of art and design as a tool for improving environments in residential care facilities. The research focuses on how art and design workshops could influence co-creation and participation through art and design from the perspective of social care professionals.

Seasonal influenza is a serious public health problem that is responsible for a significant number of illnesses, hospitalizations, and death. Influenza is of particular concern for individuals 65 years of age and older living in long-term care facilities. Historically health care workers working in long-term care facilities have had the lowest influenza vaccination rates compared to other health care facilities. Despite numerous efforts to increase health care worker vaccination rates, vaccination rates remain low. The purpose of this quality improvement project was to understand long-term care facility health care workers' knowledge, beliefs, and attitudes toward influenza vaccination with the aim of increasing vaccination rates by 5% from the previous influenza season. Methods included health care worker interviews and an educational toolkit with targeted themes identified from the interview data from two participating long-term care facilities. Results identified several key areas for education. Preliminary post-intervention data demonstrated an increase in influenza vaccination rates for both long-term care facilities from the previous influenza season. Conclusion: Based on feedback from health care workers who participated in the intervention, education is clearly important and should be a priority in facilities with low health care worker vaccination rates. Ensuring health care workers have easy access to getting vaccinated at their place of employment is a method to ensure access is convenient.

The unofficial AMPLEX owner`s manual. Voyage dans les Mers du Nord à bord de la corvette La Reine Hortense.

In 1856, Prince Napoléon, the French Emperor's cousin, carried out a four-month expedition in the North Sea. He was accompanied by a scientific committee as well as a group of painters, photographers and writers. Among the participants was Polish novelist, playwright, poet and journalist Karol Edmund Choiecki (1822–99). In 1844, he had fled Russian persecution in Poland, having been in jeopardy due to his activism and patriotic writings. He found refuge in France and befriended such members of the intellectual elite as Gustave Flaubert and George Sand. In 1857, Choiecki published a beautifully illustrated account of the expedition, in which he shares his views on navigation and exploration as he goes via Scotland, Iceland, Norway's Jan Mayen Island, Greenland, the Faroe and Shetland Islands, and Scandinavia. Choiecki paints a lyrical picture of the journey, offering a welcome contrast and addition to the scientific accounts of his day.
